

Suspension of Streetcar Planning and Updating Foothills Redevelopment Plans

Lake Oswego's Suspension of Streetcar Planning

In January 2012, the Lake Oswego City Council took steps to:

- suspend further work on the Lake Oswego to Portland Transit (streetcar) project
- preserve the public ownership of the Willamette Shore Line right-of-way
- move Foothills redevelopment forward without the streetcar

In April, 2011, when the Lake Oswego City Council tentatively approved the streetcar as the preferred transit alternative, they required that additional step of inquiry be taken before moving on to next steps in the formal federal process. The requested refinement work yielded a project that is of lower cost, faster, and more direct with fewer impacts and better integration into the neighborhoods and communities along the alignment. The Refinement Report provides the basis for the jurisdictions and community to understand what this project really is and costs. The previous Draft Environmental Impact Statement didn't bring that level of detail or understanding. While the streetcar will not be pursued for Lake Oswego, Portland, a partner in the project, may continue to pursue the streetcar as defined in the Refinement Report in the John's Landing area.

The City Council had unanimous interest in maintaining and repairing the Willamette Shore Line right-of-way and keeping it within public ownership. The Willamette Shore Line Consortium has been working on ways to reopen the line for Trolley service, to the extent possible, based on funding and safety of the line. With the suspension of planning for a streetcar which would have traveled largely on the line, the members of the Consortium will need to address issues associated with ensuring that the right-of-way is being planned for and used in the long term. The City Council is awaiting a proposal for the costs and options to improve the line for Trolley service.

Below are key documents related to the suspension of efforts to bring a streetcar to Lake Oswego.
